What does my donation to Disaster Relief and Recovery go towards?

Your donation to Red Cross Disaster Relief and Recovery helps our emergency teams to do their work – including the bushfires we're currently seeing, and disasters yet to come.

It enables us to give people the support they need in disasters: whether that's help to prepare, a safe place to take shelter, psychological first aid, information, and practical support through the months and even years it can take to recover, and currently includes emergency grants in communities affected by the recent bushfires. The vast majority of our team are volunteers. The Disaster Relief and Recovery fund covers their costs, including training, equipment and transport as well as the coordination effort to ensure our teams are where the community needs them to be. We're passionate about keeping our costs low to ensure every donation goes as far as possible.

What is Red Cross' role in emergencies?

While other agencies fight the fires and clean up the streets, Red Cross looks after the people.

We help people cope with stressful and traumatic events by offering psychological first aid, linking them to information and services they need, helping them locate their loved ones, or just offering one-to-one support as people work out what to do next.

Thank you again for your generosity of spirit, and good luck with your fundraising!

Kind regards,
Kwan
